12 Week Old Kitten Thrown from Car

Group asks anyone with information to please contact them

Oklahoma City, OK – On Saturday afternoon a 12 week old kitten was thrown from a moving car near the intersections of NW Expressway and Meridian. Another motorist who witnessed the incident stopped and removed the kitten from the road where it was taken to a local veterinary hospital for treatment.

Currently the kitten is being cared for at Neel Veterinary Hospital and is slowly recovering from injuries to the upper body and head. Doctors believe the kitten will make a full recovery. The Bella Foundation is covering all procedure costs.

"What would possess someone to throw an animal from a moving car?" asks Eric McCune, president and co-founder. "I cannot begin to imagine what is going through someone's mind to commit such an inexcusable act. Such blatant disregard for life is something that cannot be tolerated and must be stopped. This is a perfect example of why The Bella Foundation was created, when an animal is in need we are there."

The Bella Foundation is asking anyone with information to please contact them at info@thebellafoundation.org.

Since its creation in 2006 The Bella Foundation has assisted with the cost of veterinary procedures for over 200 animals in the OKC metro area. For more information please visit www.thebellafoundation.org.
